... this episode will be managing, the construction process,.

John Errico.That's a great question. It's actually not a basic question. I think there's a big misunderstanding about what a general contractor is and what a general contractor does. In my book a general contractor is a project manager. So they're the person overseeing the entire start to finish off a construction project. They may not be actually out there personally swinging a hammer. They might not even have people that work for them directly like employees of theirs swinging a hammer but they're keeping the whole construction process in line. So they're working with subcontractors -- and we can discuss what a subcontractor is later on -- they're working with subcontractors permits licenses all the nitty gritty stuff making sure that that gets done and in an ideal world. Hypothetically you could go to a general contractor and say here's my plan here's my money get it done in this time period and they'll get it done. That's not what happens almost ever in reality. But that is generally how I would think.

Ben Shelley.Maybe you're ever in reality maybe. No I don't. Ryan?

Ryan Goldfarb.I think oftentimes there's another misconception is you'll be at home depot and you'll bump into somebody and start talking to them and asking them where you can find a new switch for your kitchen light and they'll tell you they're a general contractor and they can help you with whatever problems that that you have. And you think oh great this GC is gonna solve all my problems and you know I've got this whole huge project for them to tackle and now I've got my guy.

John Errico.I prefer Lowe's for what it's worth.

Should I start singing jingles. Actually I love Home Depot. I actually heard him say wow that's a great point. Very true sorry right.

Ryan Goldfarb.Anyhow the point to distinguish there is there are general contractors in the sense that they do general construction and they are in a lot of respects handymen. And then there are the class of quote unquote general contractors in the true like capital G capital C way that John described before which is in more of the project management type role where they oversee the project at a very high level. And they're in charge of coordinating all of the moving parts particularly on a larger project. When it comes to the subcontractors and all of the different trades and the timeline and the plans and the permitting, etc.

John Errico.Yeah. And a capital G capital C general contractor usually is licensed it has insurance. So a lot of the guys that you run into at Lowe's or Home Depot will not have a license or insurance or whatever else. Nor will your general handyman and we can get into to when that would be required later. But a general contractor is normally going to have a license and insurance and you can look up their license in the state registries et cetera et cetera.

Ben Shelley.Of course I do think it's also important to note especially for early investors just doing their first project or some of their first few projects that that not to be in this is sort of intimidated from from Ryan's point as well not to be intimidated by that G and that C in front of the name of somebody to understand that this is your project that these people work for you if you don't know ask questions make sure you know you're going to be a little self-conscious undoubtedly about what you do and don't know. I know I have been in starting with you guys and in tackling our first projects but I think that it's important to also recognize sort of what you know and what you don't know but also what your
